

Gwymon

Gwymon (Seaweed) is a vertical dance performance that draws inspiration from the work and life of writer Eluned Morgan (1870 - 1938)

In 1909 Eluned Morgan published "Gwymon y Môr", describing a voyage she made to Patagonia as a teenager during which she experienced a violent storm whilst strapped to the mast of the ship. This work explores a primal female connection to the sea, based on myths and stories of women and the sea. Like seaweed, which can be nutritious but poisonous if left to rot, the dance evokes contradictory extremes of female power. Anchored by ropes, the eyes of the women scan the horizon, searching, their bodies swaying and undulating with the motion of the darting, rocking, swelling sea.

Cypher

"There's a way of playing safe, there's a way of using tricks and there's the way I like to play, which is dangerously, where you're going to take a chance on making mistakes in order to create something you haven't created before"
Dave Brubeck
